VOL. 5. NO. 63 MONESSEN, PA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1906. SIX CENTS THE WEEK

DONORA NEGRO ARRESTED FOR CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Broke Down and Wept in the Squire's Office and Begged for Mercy at the Hands of the Court.

A very pathetic scene was enacted in Squire Watkin's court this morning when Robt. Nelson, a Donora negro, was brought before that gentleman on a charge of cruelty to animals. Nelson who is a junk dealer was arrested by humane agent Madison and Chief Woolsey. He drove an old white mule which had certainly seen better days and which had a pair of extremely sore shoulders.

The principal witness was the animal itself and its testimony though silent was very conclusive. Before the hearing had begun Nelson threw himself upon the mercy of the court. Choking with sobs and with tears streaming down his face he told how the old mule was all he had with which to provide a livelihood for himself and his little boy of about eight years. He also said that he was physically unable to do hard work and that the small sum he realized from the sale of junk was barely sufficient to keep body and soul together.

He promised that if the court would show him mercy he would take the mule home, and not work it again until its shoulders had become thoroughly healed. He said that he had no money with which to pay a fine and that to go to jail and leave his little orphan boy would break his heart. Several times while thus pleading for mercy he nearly broke down and the little boy who was present also cried bitterly from the fear of losing his only protector.

Squire Watkins stated that in case the prosecutors would agree to withdraw the charge the case would be dismissed. After some discussion and Nelson had again pledged himself not to work the animal while in its present condition the case was settled by Nelson paying the costs which amounted to $1. There are many more cases of a like nature which could be cited in town and the humane society representatives are now determined to see that the law in such cases is carried out to the letter, and no exceptions will be made. Heretofore the enforcement of this law has been very lax and a change for the better is to be welcome.

At the Playhouse Tonight.

A story which will appeal to the entire family because of its purity and strength is told in the new comedy drama, "A Crown of Thorns" which is the attraction at the opera house tonight. The play is the work of Jay Hunt, who is responsible for "Hearts of Gold" and "Down by the Sea," and it is said that this, his latest work, is far superior to anything that has gone on before.

The Arnold Case.

The trial of the several defendants charged with riot, at the Republican primaries in Arnold on June 2, ceases to attract the interest shown at the outset of the case. In addition to giving his version of the affair in detail, Burgess J. L. Spiegel, of Arnold, was called this morning as a character witness for Culp, Bayle, Romig, Heckler, etc. al, testifying that, so far as he knew, from his own experience and information received, the character and reputation of each defendant was above question.

SOME HINTS FOR MERCHANTS

Prominent McKeesport Business Man Gives Views on Advertising Which May Benefit the Skeptical.

Some of the Monessen merchants who are rather skeptical as to whether it pays to advertise should read the sound advice handed out by R. E. Stone, McKeesport's leading furniture dealer, who has made himself known throughout western Pennsylvania through persistent newspaper publicity. He says:

"The only advertising that is of any real benefit to a business man is the regular issue of his best home paper. I have found it is only a waste of money to place advertising in special editons, souvenir programs, and other publications of that class. The best thing the business men of McKeesport ever did was to get together on the advertising proposition and agree to cut out everything but the regular editions of the daily newspapers. It has saved me not less than $1,000 since the agreement was made. Last year my expense for outside advertising amounted to $3,000, but in looking over our accounts recently I discovered that only $3 had been spent for the same thing, and that was for a small sign on a fence.

"The best advertising for men in the furniture business like myself is to get something that will attract the attention of the women and the regular daily issue of the newspaper is the best medium through which to reach them."

Many of Monessen's business men have cut out their advertising entirely claiming that it does not pay them They find fault with their home papers and say that there is too much of a foreign population in the town for the home newspapers to get sufficient circulation to justify a business man to buy space. They spend their money for hand bills and hire boys to go out over the hills and scatter them in the ditches. Their argument is that a foreigner can read the English language on a hand bill but he can't quite do it in the home newspaper. The Monessen papers compare favorably with those of other towns throughout the country and we find considering the size and age of the town, excels in many instances and if the merchants of Monessen cannot give us a boost instead of a kick they should expect in return what they give.

It might be well for our merchants to read what Mr. Stone has to say and consider it well before condemning the home newspapers.

WASHINGTON AUTHORITIES MAKE TROUBLE FOR MALT DEALERS

Three Arrests Have Already Been Made While a Number of Others are Likely to Follow ih the Next Few Days.

The Washington authorities have commenced proceedings against proprietors of establishments where for a long time has been going on the sale of various malt beverages under the guise of tonics or soft drinks and yesterday three arrests were made, while others are to follow. It is understood that a chemist from Pittsburg, in the court house made an analysis of the stuff retailed by Washington dealers and found that these tonics which are usually bottled under some other name than ordinary beer, contain the same per cent or in some cases a larger per cent of alcohol than that which is prepared at any brewery.

Information was made yesterday against dealers in Ozotonic and similar beverages by Chief of Police Rankin, who had warrants served on the proprietors of Gage's restaurant, South Main street; B. & O. restaurant and City restaurant. In each case a hearing was waived and the dealers gave bail for court. Numerous other establishments will be investigated by officers within the next few days.

WEBSTER NOTES

Geo. Martin was looking after business matters in Monessen today.

Miss Helen Reed of Donora spent yesterday in town with friends.

The work on the foundation of the new Vogel building is progressing nicely.

U. A. Wall and Louis Shepler spent a part of today in Monessen on business.

A tin roof is being placed on one of S. Barnum & Co.'s houses, located near the store.

W. A. Field, a prominent Glassport merchant was a business visitor here yesterday.

The P. & L. E Co. is having its buildings here repainted, which greatly improves their appearance.

Mrs. H. J. Gilbert and daughter Francis of McKeesport have returned home after spending a week in town with friends.

A number of Webster people have announced their intention of witnessing "A Crown of Thorns," at the Monessen Opera House this evening.

The other day a West Newton miner on his way home from the store carried a keg of powder on his shoulder while he smoked his pipe. He was put to bed with a spade and shovel and will probably find it awfully tiresome being dead so long.

There is a store not a hundred miles away called "the Poor Man's Friend," The other day a poor man got a check cashed there which turned out to be bogus and the storekeeper had him arrested What's in a name anyway?

The northern farmers are preparing to fight for their pear crops and have the sympathy of the local men who although not farmers will fight for the peach crops as soon as the dear girls say the word.

Several of our merchants report a shortage in the knee breechers supply The fact that school soon opens no doubt accounts for the facts. What with the teachers paddle and the cellar door they don't last long, so mamma says.

HAPPY WOMEN.

Wouldn't any woman be happy,
After years of backache suffering,
Days of misery, nights of unrest,
The distress of urinary troubles,
To find relief and cure?
No reason why any reader
Should suffer in the face of evidence like this:

Mrs. Almira A. Jackson, of East Front St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "For twenty years I was doctoring for kidney and liver trouble but without benefit. Just before I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I was almost paralyzed. I could hardly stand on my feet because of the numbness and lack of circulation. Had a knife been thrust into my kidneys the pain could not have been more intense. My sleep was disturbed by visions of distorted figures. The kidney secretions were annoyingly irregular, and I was tortured with thirst and always bloated. I used seven boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The bloating subsided until I weighed 100 pounds less, could sleep like a child and was relieved of the pain and the irregularity of the kidney action. My circulation is good and I feel better in every way."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mrs. Jackson will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists; price, 50 cents per box.

A Hard One to Swallow

[Original.]

"The romance, the coincidence—indeed, all the material for story telling that took place in the civil war—is or was inexhaustible," said the veteran when pressed for a reminiscence. "I have a story that happened to a friend of mine, but before I tell it I'm going to tell you an incident that happened to myself, for without the first I wouldn't have believed the last. I bivouacked on a farm in Tennessee one night in 1862 and noticed a country girl looking at me, as I thought, curiously. We marched in the morning, and soon after I was transferred to another field 1,000 miles away. Two years later I was back in Tennessee, where the conditions were all changed. One day we were pushing the Johnnies, and at a certain spot I noticed something familiar. A countryman who was talking with me recognized me and told me that I was on the farm on which I had bivouacked two years before. Then he told something about the girl that I wouldn't like to repeat."

"Oh, go ahead!"

"No: I'll tell you the other story. The one I've told you is true, for it happened to myself. The one I'm going to tell happened to Bill Havens, a man in my company, and I know he wouldn't lie. You see, we were shifting all the time and never could tell whom we were going to run up against. And the girls—I mean the country girls—if they saw their fate or affinity or whatever you like to call him they would drop as if struck by a bullet.

"Bill Havens was a handsome young fellow with a devil may care smile that would drop any girl. One day when our skirmish line was feeling for the enemy we stood at rest near a farmhouse, on the gallery of which were a couple of girls. Bill sang out: 'Hurrah! We're going to have a jolly fight!' One of the girls turned pale, but she gave Bill a look that I could not quite get out of my mind for some time. I wished she'd given it to me.

"The Johnnies weren't where we thought they were and we didn't have to fight after all. We went into camp near by and didn't move for a week. Meanwhile Bill had made the acquaintance of the girl who had looked at him and though he said nothing about it I knew there was a love affair going on. She couldn't have been more than seventeen—Bill was only nineteen himself—wore her skirts to the top of her boots and her hair cut square around her neck, as most of the young southern girls then wore the hair. I knew it was a bad case of love fever, for when we broke camp and moved on down south the girl was standing on the gallery and I saw her with my own eyes drop in a heap just as Bill's waving handkerchief passed out of sight.

"You must remember that the war lasted four years, and all that time the armies kept moving here and there, back and forth, places often occupied by the Johnnies and reb successively. I remember entering a beautiful southern town in '62 and was impressed with the magnificent trees that surrounded it. I went into the same place a year later after the Confederates had occupied it and every tree had been cut down to give a clear sweep for artillery. I would never have known I was in the same place.

"Well, about a year and a half after we had camped near the farmhouse where Bill met the girl we went through one of the biggest battles of the war. After it was over the Confederates withdrew, as they usually did, and leaving men to pick up the wounded and bury the dead we went on after them. Bill Havens was among the missing. He was never accounted for till he accounted for himself nearly three months afterward, and this is the account he gave. You needn't believe it unless you want to, but there were stranger things than even this happened in that war.

"During a charge Bill had fallen, pierced by a bullet in the chest. He kept his consciousness for awhile amid a din of firing, then fainted from loss of blood. The next thing he was conscious of was hearing a bird singing and not another sound. The army had moved on; the men left to bury the dead and succor the wounded had moved on, too, leaving Bill lying under bushes where they hadn't seen him. Death seemed only put off. It might be years before his body would be found.

"Now I'm going to leave Bill to starve to death or die of his wound and twist my story to the girl he had met long before. She was sitting on the gallery where she had last seen Bill, thinking about him, of course, when she heard something drop lightly on the steps before her. Looking down she saw a gold watch chain with a piece of white paper tied to it. She picked it up and read the paper. It was written in blood and read: 'Union soldier dying. Help.'

"She didn't wait to speculate on how the chain got there; she knew all about the battle and rushed off on a search, calling as she went. At last she heard a faint answer, and going to the spot found the man she loved.

"Bill had taken his watch chain, got a piece of paper from his pocket, broken off a twig and written the message with his own blood. Then he rammed it down his musket and fired it at an angle."

The listeners rose indignantly, muttering, "When are we to get rid of these stories of the civil war?"

"When we vets are all dead," said the story teller.

ELLSWORTH EMERSON.

A Literary Career

[Original.]

Willoughby Dwight was an original. He took no interest in that to which he and others were accustomed, but took a great interest in creating new things. Both Dwight and his friend Buckley were on the editorial staff of the same newspaper, and both took a hand in outside literary work. Buckley, unlike Dwight, was constantly studying what publishers wanted, not what he wanted to give them. At the time there was a craze among them for what they called "real life," but the real life they gave seemed to emanate from people who talked slang and had not had much schooling. Buckley went in for this class of literature.

For twenty years Dwight peddled his original performances among publishers, only to be laughed at. Then he tried his hand at the commonplace. But somehow he couldn't make his characters talk quite like real horse jockeys and housemaids and athletes, and his efforts in this direction were also a failure. At last, worn out with repeated disappointment, he fell ill.

Meanwhile Grace Baxter, who had promised to marry the literary failure when he had been successfully launched on a literary career, he wouldn't be married till he had made some success—went to see him. Finding that something must be done to lift him out of the slough of despond, she took one of his old manuscripts to her aunt, a rich old lady with a kindly heart, with whom she conspired to make her lover believe that she had found a publisher for the story. Then she went back to the invalid with the welcome news. Dwight got better, but soon began to worry about the delay in the publication.

So the aunt furnished a few hundred dollars for the "plates" and a few printed copies. Then Grace succeeded by giving a third rate publisher the printing job in getting his "imprint" on the title page and thus found a distributer.

The day Dwight saw his book in print he sat up for the first time in six months. But he at once began to worry about the criticisms. So his devoted sweetheart, aided by her aunt, ordered a hundred copies printed and sent them to the critics. But those who noticed the book at all either dismissed it with contempt or made fun of it. Grace was in despair. As each new criticism appeared she looked anxiously for something that she could show the sick man. At last her eye lit on the following:

The author of "The Tall House on the Low Hill" has struck a new vein of humor—indeed, it is a creation, but it will be long before it will be appreciated by the reading public, for one who steps into untrodden paths, whether it be literature, science or art, must wait until his audience's eyesight becomes accustomed to the new light.

As soon as Grace saw this comment she hurried with it to her lover. She found him in despair. He had surreptitiously sent out to a collector of newspaper clippings for criticisms, and, excepting the one Grace bore, they were all before him. She read the favorable words to him with as triumphant an air as she could assume.

That criticism was the turning point with the patient. The one medicine he needed had been found. In a hundred critics there was but one whose analytic brain, or power of appreciation or discrimination, had enabled him to strike the keynote of its real value. Dwight got out of bed and took personal charge of pushing his book. But the unwelcome fact mentioned by his critic that he must wait for an audience proved to be true. "The Tall House on the Low Hill" was pronounced the work of a lunatic by most readers, though a few "caught on" to its subtle humor. The encomiums of these were a source of wonder to the many, and disputes as to what the author meant grew more and more frequent.

Nevertheless the book was a financial failure. But Dwight had several such performances in his attic and persuaded the publisher who had kindly lent his imprint to the first to undertake a second at his own expense. Dwight did not know that Grace Baxter's aunt had sent the firm a check for $500 to cover the risk.

The second book, "Mr. Barnickel," captured the few persons who had seen the drift of the first, and a great many more. But people who appreciated neither of them wondered that any publisher could be found to publish such rot. Meanwhile the audience was widening. In "Mr. Barnickel" was a small profit to author and publisher. Dwight continued to brush the dust from his manuscripts, and under such slight encouragement to write others. "Mr. Barnickel" attracted sufficient attention to warrant the editor of a struggling magazine to publish the third story, "Four and Twenty Blackbirds Baked In a Pie," before it was issued in book form. By this time so many persons enjoyed the author's peculiar humor that those who did not pretended they did. The flickering flame of appreciation burst into a conflagration. The name of Willoughby Dwight was on every one's tongue. His profits on his last book were considerable, and the printers were kept busy getting out new editions of it and of his two others.

Willoughby Dwight no longer does newspaper work. At his country seat in seclusion, with Grace Baxter, his wife, he continues to delight an audience that has grown to look forward to each new effusion from his pen. His friend Buckley is still in the traces, making a comfortable income from his salary and a number of stories that he sells for a reasonable price.

A Prosperous Bank.

The First National Bank of Webster is one of the most prosperous financial institutions in this section of the country. At present it is enjoying the fruits of a most prosperous season. B B Hunter, the present cashier, is working over time at present. A statement will soon be issued which will show the stockholders as well as the patrons of the institution that it is on the increase.

Letter to E. M. Moyer.

Monessen, Pa.

Dear Sir: You know diamonds don't go by size. So with paint.

We make paint, one gallon of which goes as far as two of another and lasts twice as long; that's four to 1.

You know it is true in diamonds; they don't go by the gallon, do they?

If you're going to paint your house, you go first to your painter and say: "I'm going to paint; do you want the job? and what'll it cost?"

If he happens to know he'll say: "Depends on the paint. I can do it for somewhere about $100 or $200, which ever you like; $100 will make a good job, $200 a poor one."

And you, if you happen to have your wife, I'll say: "I'll take the good one, when'll you do it?"

Painters ought, all, to know about paint; and jewelers ought to be able to get a good job. We do what we can to help both.

One gallon Devoe is better than two of average paint, goes as far — that is your house will take about 20 gallons Devoe and 40 of average paint—and Devoe will wear a long time; the life of average paint is very uncertain, it may be a year, it may be five.

Why is it that painters don't know about paint? Do jewelers know about diamonds? They know more than they tell sometimes. There are painters and painters; so there are jewelers; so there is paint, and the least-gallons paint is Devoe.

Yours truly

Bearing Another's Burden.

That it is not impossible to ring a new change on woman's aversion to telling her correct age has been proved by the rector of a New York church. He does not appear to be more than fifty years old, but declared to an inquiring parishioner that he was seventy-five and added, "I shall be seventy-seven my next birthday."

"The other evening," he explained, "my wife and I computed that our combined ages foot up to a hundred years. Now, of course, no lady is ever over twenty-five years old, so to keep peace in the family I suppose I must say I'm seventy five."

"But why will you be seventy-seven your next birthday?"

"Because my wife's birthday and mine happen to fall on the same date, and"—with a sigh of resignation—"of course I shall have to shoulder both of them."

Presidential Coincidences.

John Adams was eight years older than his successor, Thomas Jefferson; he eight years older than James Madison; he eight years older than James Monroe, and he eight years older than John Q. Adams. George Washington ended his term as president in his sixty-fifth year, and so, too, did John Adams. Thomas Jefferson, James Madison and James Monroe. Thomas Jefferson and John Adams died on the same day, July 4, 1826, exactly fifty years after the signing of the Declaration of Independence. One other president, James Monroe, died on July 4. His death occurred in 1831.
